Snaps for Greenhouse Forcing

The best possible strain you can get, is the first step toward a profitable crop. The originator has a selfish interest in keeping his introduction up to the highest possible standard, therefore because of this, we handle originator's greenhouse grown strains almost exclusively. One classic instance showed a difference of 150 dozen cut blooms, one packet seed, same space, same variety but grown from different strains.

Please Note: Due to increased costs it is no longer possible to allow group and quantity prices on the forcing Snapdragon offered below.

SOWING AND GERMINATION

Growing Snaps from seed during the heat of summer often is found difficult and results are not as good as they should be. Primarily the medium used to sow into has a great bearing on results. Excellent germination has been had in flats filled with finely sifted old cinders. Where only cinders are used liquid feeding is necessary when the plants make their third or fourth leaf. Another method is to fill flats almost full with good light soil, sterilized with formaldehyde or steam, covering the top 1/2 inch with cinders, sand or finely ground sphagnum moss. Sown on top, without covering, pressed into the soil, watered very gently, kept uniformly moist and cool, little difficulty should be experienced. When sufficient ventilation is given there should be little damping off and any that should start can be promptly stopped with a dusting of Zinc Oxide or Fermate. We also recommend dusting seed before sowing with Hormo Root A. The cost is practically nothing and it does make a difference.

With labor such a factor, this important cut flower assumes even greater importance. Sowing directly in the bench makes for stronger, more vigorous plants. Careful thinning, selecting the strongest notched leaved seedlings to remain and proper feeding (1 lb. Ammonium sulphate to the 100 sq. ft. every two weeks until buds form) will assure a high percentage of doubles.

close 3 x 6 they can be grown to a single stem like the columns. Many consider most profitable of all stocks.
